
Keri Roth, formerly Robison, grew up playing tennis on the courts at Fairview Park in Decatur, IL. Her father, Dave Robison introduced her to the game at a young age and it flourished into a lifelong love for the sport. Her mother, Kelly drove her to endless tennis tournaments around the country and she went on to play collegiate tennis for Northwestern University. Learning from Decatur tennis professional, Chuck Kuhle, and eventually from Jack Sharpe, the tennis courts in Decatur acted as a springboard for much of her life.

Keri and her husband Connor, now reside in the Lincoln Park neighborhood in Chicago where they have two daughters, Quinn and Zoe.

The Illinois Women's Pro Tennis Championships is an important part of the United States Tennis Association (USTA) Pro Circuit and the International Tennis Federation (ITF) World Tour. This professional women's tennis tournament provides players with the opportunity to earn valuable ranking points needed to compete at the highest levels of the sport. Over 70 players from 20 different countries are expected to vie for Women's Tennis Association (WTA) ranking points and a share of $30,000 in prize money. The event takes place at the Fairview Tennis Complex, recognized in 2008 as an Outstanding Tennis Facility by the USTA.

Again this year, the Decatur Community Tennis Foundation and its dedicated volunteers will organize the tournament. Established in 1985, this 501(c)(3) nonprofit organization has long supported tennis in the Decatur area, funding junior, high school, college, and adult programs, as well as maintaining the Fairview Tennis Complex.

If you're a tennis enthusiast, consider exploring sponsorship opportunities. By participating, you or your company can contribute to one of Decatur's premier sporting events and support tennis as "the sport for a lifetime."
